Stewart and Ashley Clouse grew up in rural Nebraska, spent 10 years in Dallas, and traveled full-time in an RV as a family for three years before finding their farm in the Ozark foothills of Oklahoma's Green Country. They fell in love with it on their first visit, and they now use permaculture and regenerative practices to restore the land. They describe themselves as a small farm with a large family: they've been married an over 20 years and have 10 children, and every one of the kids runs a venture of their own on the farm. Stewart works off the farm part-time and loves music and math. Ashley stays home with the children and is a lifelong wildcrafter and herbalist. The Clouses welcome visitors for tours, classes, and field trips, and they keep everything they do family-friendly. They love sharing what they're learning and showing others what's possible on a small piece of land.
